

Budapest
Day 4

12 Sep 2016

No motorised transport is allowed on St Margaret's Island - very peaceful - though we were almost run over by various mini tractors and lawnmowers! We ditched the 5km run (there is a circuit!) and opted to walk instead Jackie with one of her modelling poses on the bridge in The Japanese Garden.

The musical fountain
apparently 'plays'
every hour and lights
up in the evening.

Bussed and trained it back to Buda old town
for a well-earned coffee, then climbed up to the Castle
Quarter

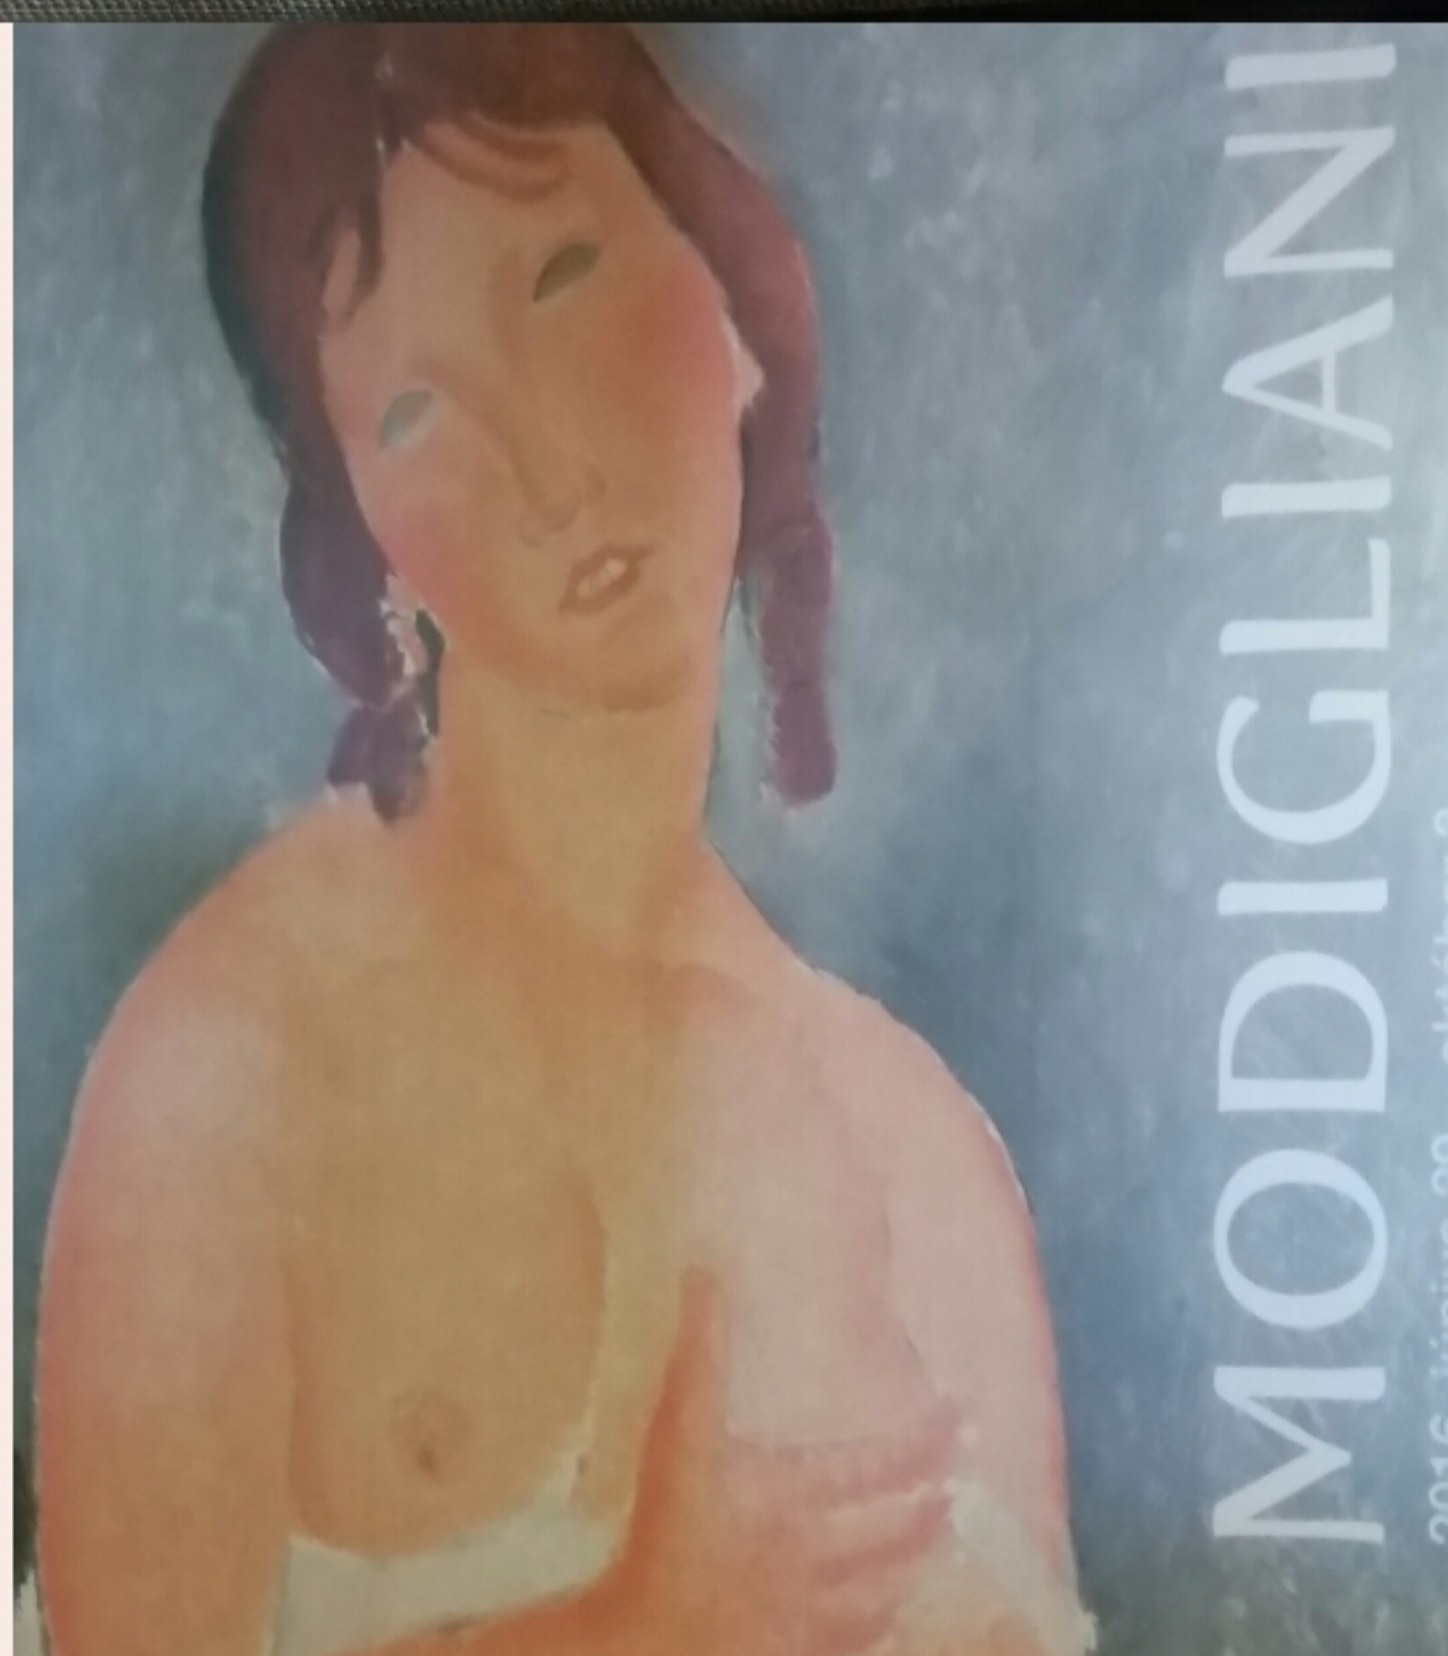

Fisherman's Bastion,
behind the brightly-tiled Mátyás Church offers spectacular views
over the Danube.

*“When I know your soul,
I will paint your eyes”*

Modigliani Exhibition
in The National Gallery...where we'd been drinking wine
only a couple of days
ago. Still cultural though, eh?!

Walked around a lot more - down from the Castle, across to Pest, around the Parliament around there a lot, stopped for lunch, waited for Alaskan Chris then walked some more....before heading off for a nice long soak

Széchenyi Baths is the largest and hottest spa in Budapest, built as a neo-Baroque palace with swimming pools & 13 thermal baths
